EXHIBIT A: As each person speaks for the first time, write their name in the next row down of the first column. Then when they give their second speech, write in the second column (and cross out their name in the first column), and so on. This way you can track precedence among competing members (whichever member has made it to the fewest columns / is farthest left has priority), recency among equal-precedence members (pick whichever speaker is highest in the column they are tied for), you can resume debate where you left off on an item (e.g. after a tabling, amendment, or lengthy break), and can announce how many speeches have been given under each PO's leadership.

EXHIBIT B: On your seating chart, write the number of the speech a person is giving below their name. So, when someone gives the first speech, write a 1 below their name. Second speech gets a 2, et cetera. When someone speaks for a second time, note this underneath (or next to) where you noted the first speech. When people stand, quickly scan the chart; You can take in at a glance who has fewer speeches, and if you compare numbers, you can instantly see who spoke more recently.

QUESTIONING: Tally marks below the numbers on your seating chart are generally sufficient for tracking the number of questions asked, should you care to do that.
